	Rovno (N 50-35, E 26-10)	1947 to September 1950.	Barracks installation of numerous multi-story brick buildings and an unidentified number of smaller buildings, enclosed by a wire fence.	North perimeter of the city south of the road to Lutsk (N 50-45, E 25-17).	The barracks installation was referred to by local residents as Veyazny Gorodok. Prior to September 1950, it was occupied by a motorized unit wearing red-bordered black epaulets including some with tank and some with winged-wheel insignia. A general's office was in the installation.
			Motor vehicle repair shop.	North side of the road to Luck, opposite the barracks installation mentioned above.	The shop was the 26th Motor Vehicle Repair Shop. Soldiers were observed maintaining motor vehicles and military equipment in a separately fenced section of the installation. Civil motor vehicles were repaired in the other section of the installation.
			Military depot, enclosed by a board fence, 3 meters high and topped with barbed wire; and served by a railroad spur track.	Northwestern sector of the city, on the western bank of the Uscie River and south of the electric power plant.	From 40 to 50 T-34 tanks and tanks of other types, 12 heavy AA guns and an undetermined number of Zis-150 and studebaker trucks were observed in the depot. Equipment arrived by rail, but no outgoing shipments were observed.
			Military depot, surrounded by a wooden fence topped with barbed station, on the wire, and equipped north side of Karl Marx Street,	Western perimeter of the city, southwest of the railroad	The contents of the depot was undetermined. The installation was guarded by soldiers.

		New barracks installation of four three-story billets and seven other buildings; enclosed by a barbed-wire fence.	On the west side of a road from the city in a southern direction.	The installation was still under construction in December 1949. Soldiers of an advance party stated that the installation would be occupied by a motorized infantry unit in early 1950.
		Barracks installation of six barracks buildings, one kitchen and mess building, and two garages; enclosed by a barbed-wire fence.	About 1,000 meters southwest of the [REDACTED] yard on the northern perimeter of the old city.	Occurred by a guard's military police battalion of 300 to 400 men which had been located in Moscow prior to mid-1949. A colonel was the commander of the unit. The soldiers wore blue uniforms with red epaulettes and red patches on their overcoats, trousers with red piping, tucked into the boots, and red cap bands. The unit was equipped with light infantry weapons. Motor vehicles observed included about 20 light and medium trucks and 10 jeeps. It was common knowledge among the residents of the city that the battalion had frequently been committed to fight guerrillas in the area of Koraganda.
